Hospitality Marks Dinners, Perhaps Less Formal During Vacation Period of Summer

Cyrus E. Woods, New Ambassador to Spain, Guest of Envoy Here and Officials-Many Important Folk Still Remaining Home.

BY SALLIE V. H. PICKETT.

OTWITHSTANDING the departure of so many high officials and diplomats for summer places in various parts of the country, the week just past showed a sufficient number of important folk in Washington to make dinner-giving a joy less formal and per haps more delightful than in midwinter. Hosts for Mr. Cyrus E. Woods, recently appointed United States ambassador to Madrid, who came to Washington early in the week to complete his arrangements with the Department of State preparatory to sailing about mid-August, included the ambassador of Spain, the Secretary of the Treasury and the undersecretary of state and Mrs. Fletcher. When he goes to Spain Mr. Woods will be accompanied by his accomplished wife, who, like the ambassador, is an excellent linguist and speaks French fluently, and with their social importance the American embassy will uphold a dignity and interest second to none in Madrid.

THERE is an intimation that the President and Mrs. Harding may exceed the length of their well planned rest in New Hampshire on account of necessary repairs to the White House, such as changing since they became chief executive and since they became chief executive and underground pipes, etc., no such repairs having been carried on since the restoration of the mansion in the Roosevelt administration. The interior as well as the exterior is receiving its dress of shining white paint, but aside from very necessary repairs there will be nothing added to the furnishing of the state drawing rooms. As Mrs. Harding will carry out the program of official state entertainment, there will necessarily be extra linens and a replacement of china required. At any rate, it is intended to have the odor of fresh paint out of the house before the family returns.

WITH the constant shuffling about of diplomats in and out of Washington and from one post to another, it is indeed a compliment that Senor Don Ignacio Calderon, for so many years representative of Bolivia to this country, should so live in the hearts of his colleagues in the Bolivia to this country, should so live in the hearts of his colleagues in the and houseboats that appear fre-corps and Washington folk in general that his birthday anniversary should many times at anchor in the harbon be remembered. That is what happened last week, and much to his surprise and delight his friends from the Pan-American Union and others who have become attached to him sent him remembrances and good wishes all during the day. Senor Calderon has made his home in Washington for more than sixteen years, representing his government most VOUNGER members of the diplomatic corps are chafing under enforced residence in the capital during August, and many of them are filanning to attend the lawn tennis tournaments at various summer places. Others are planning interesting sightseeing trips over the country and a still larger number are gathering at Newport and Bar Harbor for the August season. A few of the older diplomats, like the ambassador of Spain, Senor Riano, find the capital bearable even in mid-August and are going on with a comfortable existence quite as if it were midwinter.
